Editorial Correspondence St. Paul Press.

TRANSPORT SILVER CLOUD.

CAIRO, Nov. 27, 1864.

A letter from a soldier's wife says: "If you know with how much pleasure we read your letters to the Press you would write often." This puts my duty to write you in a new light, or at least a stronger light than I had seen it before. I have not written you the last four months—I believe it is that long—because we have hardly rested long enough to write a letter, and there was nothing occurring of special interest. Besides, we were much of the time away from the facilities. I will endeavor to let your readers hear from me often; certainly if there is reason to believe they especially care to hear.

Briefly let me narrate the movements, since I last wrote you, of the first division 16th army corps, to which belong our 6th, 7th, 8th and 10th Minnesota regiments. Understand that Major General A. J. Smith's command is the "right wing" of the 16th army corps, embracing two divisions—the first and third. Our regiments are all in the first division, now commanded by Brig. Gen. J. M. Arthur—recently by Brig. Gen. J. A. Mower. (The battle of Tupelo obtained for Gen. Mower promotion to a Major General's rank, which he well merited. After he was commissioned Major General, he was relieved of the command of the first division, and ordered to Gen. Thomas, where, I believe, he has a responsible cavalry command—better suited to his dashing, adventurous nature than the less mobile infantry.)

The whole month of August was consumed in a slow moving expedition into Northern Mississippi. We reached Oxford, on the Mississippi Central railroad, on the 22d, where, from orders from Sherman, we were ordered to Memphis. The third division, under Gen. Smith's immediate command, started early in September for Eastern Tennessee, but halted at Cairo and finally went to St. Louis, where it was held to protect that place from Price's army.

The first division under Gen. Mower went, as your readers know, to Arkansas and began the pursuit of Gen. Price. Our march from Brownsville, Arkansas, to Cape Girardeau, Missouri, then by railroad, to Jefferson City, Missouri, then marching to the Kansas border and back again to St. Louis, was one of the hardest any of our armies have performed. Veterans, who have served since the beginning of the war, say they never before experienced such continuous hard marching. From Brownsville to Cape Girardeau, 315 miles, the march was performed in nineteen days, on ten days hard rations and about four days meat rations. Pretty full meat rations, however, were obtained by foraging on the route. We left Memphis under the impression that we should go only to some point on the White river, and thence return on the transports that took us out. It was excessively hot—September 22d—and the men were thinly clad, and without woolen blankets. Before we started from Brownsville the nights grew cold, so that the men suffered. Large bivouac fires were resorted to, which helped, but did not wholly remedy the evil. Shoes and other clothing failed on the march, producing a great amount of suffering. I believe ten per cent. of my command—the same of other regiments—were barefoot, when we got to Cape Girardeau. It was pitiable to see the poor fellows—some crippled, some starved, some over the stony hills of southeast Missouri, with blistered and bleeding feet—some with naked legs, some coatless, some shirtless, some hatless. To know men—true men—heroes—you need to see them under such circumstances. God keep us from all impatience with all possible neglect or unkindness to the gallant men who have proved themselves faithful under such trials. In battle there is excitement—there may be enthusiasm to carry common men to deeds of heroism, but on the long, weary, monotonous marches, half-starved and half-naked, it is only the truest manhood, the noblest stuff of which men are made, that sustains the common soldier.

Not was the lot of line officers much better. Marching on foot with the men, measuring the weary leagues with tired, aching limbs, and often blistered feet—for boots and shoes do not secure from these—my regard and admiration for them is heightened unceasingly. I am impatient, in my tribute to the soldierly endurance of men and officers, that was performed in Western Missouri. There were harder marches there, and really cold, wintry weather; now storms, and chilling rains, and winds that pierced to the marrow. Remember, we had no tents, no shelter for the men, except such as they improvised in the night by bivouacs.

One stormy, wintry night, the men driven in our faces by a keen north wind, were marching for miles in advance of us. That morning we marched from La Mine to Sedalia, sixteen miles, where we joined the 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, with them sometime in relation to the geography of the country, the hiding places for guerrillas and other information useful to him in the performance of his duties. The day was fine and he neglected to put on his cap, and if he had left it off purposely it is certainly no disgrace for a gentleman to remain uncovered in the presence of ladies.

The other story is a complete fabrication from beginning to end. No negro ever applied to him for protection. The only resemblance to such a case was when a negro claimed that a white man, formerly his master, had been his employee, owed him fifty dollars and was about to leave the country. The Lieutenant Colonel satisfied himself of the justice of the claim, sent for the white man and made him cancel the debt. Why should negroes apply for protection here where they know they are free, and where hundreds of negro troops are stationed and continually going about recruiting from every plantation? Bloodhounds and lashes are certainly not very rampant in a country commanded by Gen. Taine for two years and "stealing fugitives" can scarcely exist except in a very naïve imagination, where every highway and byway is patrolled by the blue coats of Uncle Sam.

In the interests of humanity Col. Ball had proceeded outside his military power to a certain extent, and without waiting for orders had laid out and established a camp for contrabands and freedmen on the grounds of a Mr. Cartwright, a wealthy citizen of this place, where they could obtain food and water in plenty, and be more easily provided for during the winter, and had laid in progress when we received. The number of negroes crowded in the old buildings about this town, continually increasing, principally by accessions from Kentucky, as this is the nearest point to the line, on the other side of which they are still held as slaves, is a most serious and pressing question. They are to be provided for during the winter, protected from the cold and furnished with food. Your own knowledge of Lieut. Col. Ball's kind heart and just feelings would be, I presume, sufficient to assure you of the falsity of the representations made. But they are made so positively and with such malicious intent that I have taken occasion to write this. The health of the regiment is very good. We have just been paid off. Hood is down in front of Nashville. Some of Forrest's cavalry are hovering around our posts threatening an attack. We are vigilant and await them with confidence, trusting to give a good account of ourselves when they do come, which will probably be sometime during the next fortnight. I remain, very respectfully, Your obedient servant, M. MAGINNIS.

An Architectural Question.

On looking over the Pioneer of yesterday I observed an editorial in which I thought I had found a new Kohinoor, in the description of a fine villa, now being finished for your esteemed citizen P. Berkeley, Esq. Not wishing to give the matter any more notice than is necessary for my object, and really only in clarity's pen, thinking that Mr. Shiere's pencil has given a number of fine villas, I feel a deep interest in the description of this new villa. It is the plain though still tasteful style and elegant American style. Feeling very sincere and unselfish interest even in St. Paul, in the cause of art and correct taste, I took a pilgrimage to this "fine villa" and took a specimen of the "American style." As an Englishman, and a great lover of American and Americans, amongst the best class of whom I have mixed, both professionally and otherwise, with much pleasure and profit for the last four years, I must confess for their sake, I hope as an artist that this is not the American style, that nothing can excel it in purity of tone and neatness of proportion. If it is, God help the future of architecture in Minnesota. I expected from the description given by my friend of the Pioneer that that marvellous (of course, from the description) unknown arrangement in ancient or modern architecture, "stairs" was something different from what foreign and fantastic styles of architecture admitted of, in this "fine villa" of the pure American style. Although naturally an enthusiast I thought of St. Maria Del Fiore at Florence, (Lombard-Italian, Mr. Editor, that is a style, foreign as it may seem.) I thought of the Gloucestershire, Wyndham Palace, England, (foreign and fantastic again, Mr. Editor.) I even
